Most of us have attended a conference, a convention, a trade show or a special event such as a concert or a wedding held in a beautiful hotel. Little thought goes into how much planning went into these functions to make them a success. That work is done by a meeting planning professional. Meeting planners coordinate every detail of meetings and conventions, from the meeting location, to the speakers, to arranging for printed and web-based materials and audio-visual equipment. Professional planners search for prospective meeting sites, which could be hotels, convention centers, conference centers or concert arenas. They negotiate contracts with speakers, entertainment, facilities and suppliers and must oversee finances. They are given overall budgets by their organizations and must create a detailed budget, forecasting what each aspect of an event will cost. The job of a meeting or event planner is to create a great experience for the attendees and exhibitors who participate. This industry inspires people to be creative, efficient, organized, and in a constant state of growth.

Meetings, conventions, and events bring people together for a common purpose, and the planners work to ensure that this purpose is achieved seamlessly. An important part of all these different functions of meeting professionals is establishing and maintaining relationships. Meeting, convention, and event planners interact with a variety of people and must be able to communicate effectively. They must understand their organization’s goals for the meeting or convention, be able to communicate their needs clearly to meeting site staff and other suppliers, maintain contact with many different people, and inform people about changes as they occur.

All students are admitted directly into the Hospitality Management Major and will receive the education required to manage any business through their participation in courses such as human resources management, organizational behavior, facilities management, hospitality law and a course in leadership, management and ethics. Students also study food sanitation, food service operations, cost control, career development, financial and managerial accounting, financial management, hospitality service management, and operations and strategic management.

The addition of a concentration in Meetings and Events Management provides study focused on the convention, conference, tradeshow and special events industry through additional coursework taken in introduction to convention, meeting planning, special events management, and a capstone course called Festivals which utilizes all learned knowledge to put on an actual event. The addition of the required work experience and internship in the meetings and events area as well as a broad liberal arts approach to the general education core makes this program second to none in preparing future meetings and events planners and managers.

Career Opportunities

The meetings and events industry is an exciting, fast-paced field, which allows, encourages, and rewards creativity and innovation. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, employment of meeting and convention planners is expected to grow faster than the average for all occupations over the next decade. As businesses and organizations become increasingly international, meetings and conventions become even more important. In organizations that span the country or the globe, the periodic meeting is increasingly the only time the organization can bring all of its members together. Remember also that many graduates are employed on the venue side, working in conference centers and hotels with conference facilities. They are the people that professional planners work with in arranging events and meetings for their organizations. Being an independent planner is another option that can be challenging but rewarding, and is one of the fastest growing segments in the meetings industry according to Professional Meeting Management®, Fifth Edition (PMMS).
