OVERVIEW

The Nebraska Summer Research Program offers undergraduate students who are U.S. citizens or permanent residents the opportunity to participate in nationally funded research groups across multiple disciplines. Designed for students with an interest in pursuing graduate education, the program provides a first hand glimpse into life as a graduate student and prepares undergraduates to take that next step. Students are selected to work closely with a specific faculty mentor and their team of researchers throughout the summer on either an ongoing research project or a project condensed to fit the 8 to 10 week timeframe.

Since 2007, Graduate Studies has provided the program infrastructure for the individual research groups. The office administers and oversees the application process, student communication, and acts as a resource for scholars throughout their summer experience. Graduate Studies coordinates the students’ travel and housing, sponsors social events, and offers professional development workshops to assist students in their pursuit of graduate education.
