The Greenspun College of Urban Affairs was created in 1996 to reflect UNLV’s commitment to the community it serves and to the goal of becoming a major metropolitan research university. Through research, teaching, and the development of innovative collaborations between students, faculty, and the community, the college seeks to prepare community leaders and provide solutions to some of our most pressing societal problems.

With the completion of Greenspun Hall, six of the seven academic units that comprise the Greenspun College of Urban Affairs will for the first time be housed in one central location. Greenspun Hall was designed, in part, to help foster closer collaboration among department faculty and to encourage interdisciplinary efforts to address the critical issues affecting the quality of life in our state, the region, and the world.

The following units are now housed in Greenspun Hall:

- Media Facility (1st floor – opening in fall 2009)
- Student Advising Center for the Greenspun College of Urban Affairs (2nd floor)
- Hank Greenspun School of Journalism and Media Studies (2nd Floor)
- Environmental Studies (3rd Floor)
- School of Social Work (3rd Floor)
- Communication Studies (4th Floor)
- Public Administration (4th Floor)
