

A group of people are gathered around a table, looking at a laptop and documents. The scene is dimly lit, with the primary light source coming from the laptop screen. The people are wearing casual to business-casual attire. One person is pointing at a document, while another is holding a pen. The overall atmosphere is one of collaborative work and discussion.

As a longtime advocate for military families, my personal and professional experiences have highlighted the need for increased academic assistance for highly-mobile military children, particularly at the elementary level. Every time a military child moves, that student encounters radically different education systems because states differ not only in what they teach, but when and how they teach it. My policy work examines how to best assist military children with these frequent transitions and improve their academic performance.
