

THE BROOKINGS PUBLIC POLICY MINOR

The Brookings Public Policy Minor at UNLV is a unique educational experience that offers a multidisciplinary curriculum based upon local, national, and global themes in public policy. Courses in the Brookings Public Policy Minor unite the best teaching and scholarship from UNLV faculty with national experts and scholars from the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C. Through Brookings Mountain West, this collaboration draws upon the diverse faculty and programmatic interests of UNLV to link knowledge, academic inquiry, and practice with the outstanding policy programs of the Brookings Institution.

In Brookings Public Policy Minor courses, students will:

- Learn about real people in real places
- Link societies by their connections and commonalities as much as by their differences
- Integrate general issues of globalization, past and present, into the study of specific people and places in the world
- Include cross-disciplinary approaches to break down conventional academic barriers
- Emphasize experiential as well as classroom learning
- Foster research and information literacy through coordinated lectures, readings, and assignments

The Brookings Public Policy Minor is an 18-credit program which requires completion of URST 101: Brookings: Introduction to Public Policy, and a pre-approved independent study course supervised by a UNLV faculty member. Additionally, students are required to complete 4 upper division courses from a pre-approved list (see below) to fulfill the minor. Students must have a UNLV GPA of 3.00 in order to declare the Brookings Public Policy Minor. Students must maintain a minimum Brookings Public Policy Minor GPA of 3.00 across all classes used to fulfill the requirements of the minor.
