UNLV’s Department of Anthropology is seeking research proposals for Edwards & Olswang Grants. The amount of the award varies based upon the merit of the proposal. Applicants must be admitted graduate students and currently enrolled in the Department of Anthropology. Approved awards will be distributed in August 2014.

- Recipients must be enrolled as full time graduate students (GAs 6 credit hours; non-GA’s 9 credit hours) to receive this award.

Applications must be received by the departmental deadline. See application form for deadline. A complete application will consist of:

1. A complete graduate transcript.
2. A current CV.
3. A proposal detailing the professional activity to be supported. Such activity might include:
   - Research expenses (e.g., travel, fieldwork related expenses, lab expenses, and research participant compensation, etc.)
   - Travel to professional conferences
   - Purchase of equipment to support research
4. A budget should include the following information:
   a. What other moneys have been applied for and/or received?
   b. What part of that large budget are you specifically requesting coverage for in the Anthropology scholarship application?
   c. Will you be able to complete the project or undertaking if you only receive partial funding?

The text of the proposal should be no more than five double-spaced pages. In order to be eligible for the Edwards and Olswang award, students must complete a FAFSA application and an online UNLV Scholarship application for the current academic year, available on the UNLV Financial Aid and Scholarship Website (http://finaid.unlv.edu/scholarships-grants/), before submitting their scholarship application.
